Tajuddin's Dream to Heal

Tajuddin is a quiet but focused young student with a powerful ambition: he wants to become a doctor and help people in need. That dream may seem out of reach for many children from low-income backgrounds—but with the support of Soham School and his devoted family, Tajuddin is making steady steps toward turning it into reality.

He lives with his parents and siblings in a small rented space in Hyderabad. His father, Maqbool, drives an auto-rickshaw for a living, often working long hours with little financial security. His mother, though not formally educated, plays a key role in supporting the family's needs at home. While both parents are illiterate, they deeply value education and believe it is the key to a better life for their children.

When they enrolled Tajuddin at Soham School, they were filled with hope. For them, this school offered more than just free education—it offered a future. The school not only removed the financial barrier, but also welcomed Tajuddin into an environment where he could grow in knowledge, confidence, and purpose.

In class, Tajuddin is a curious and thoughtful student. He listens carefully, asks insightful questions, and is particularly interested in science and how the human body works. His dream of becoming a doctor is not just a fantasy—it's a commitment to helping others, born from observing the struggles of those around him who lack access to proper medical care.

Thanks to Soham, Tajuddin now has a clear path ahead. And perhaps most inspiring of all, his dedication has encouraged his family to fully support education—for him and his younger siblings. His story shows that when a child dares to dream, it can uplift an entire household.
